OF

Ancient Aztec Relics

From the Mancoos Canon,

La Plata County, South-Western Colorado.

EXPLANATORY.

The Cliff dwellings were built in wind-worn caves, and so well protected by the overhanging cliffs that no moisture ever reaches them. This accounts for the fine state of preservation of this collection. Most of the articles found were covered with debris.

When we mention a recess back of the house, we mean the inner part of the cave or that part that was too low to allow them to build in. They used the recesses to store the ashes and refuse in, and as a burial place.

By “sealed” room is meant one that had the doors and windows closed with masonry.

Any article not otherwise described came from a cliff house.

GROUP A.

Consisting of Human Remains.

1. A skull found in mound at mouth of Webber canon, where is found a large collection of ancient houses. With this was found No. 1 of Group B. This skull is flattened from above and behind, as though the pressure had been forward and downward, and presents an entirely different angle of flattening from any other skull found in the entire collection. This is the only skull found in a mound; all others were found in cliff houses, or in recesses back of them.

2. Skull found in recess behind the inner wall of large house in Navajo canon. This house has about 70 rooms on the ground floor, and had been three or four stories.

3. Skull of child found in cliff house in Johnson canon, was covered with about one foot of debris. With this was found No. 36 of Group B.

4. Skull found in left fork of Cliff canon and in largest cliff house found. This house has 112 rooms on the ground
