Professor C. C. Marsh,

March 3, 1899

Dear Sir,

I have in my possession three trilobites which are of no especial interest to me, though they may be of interest to you of the Peabody Museum, and if they will be of any use there, I will be very glad to send them, on receiving a postal saying that ^{you} would like them. The specimens are respectively "good, bad, and indifferent," the good one, being very good, I think, as the gentleman did not curl up and die, as is usual with all that I have seen, but is flat, about an inch long and perfect to my unscientific eyes. The others are curled up, one the size of a hickory nut, and the other rather small, and not so perfect.

Mr Robert Brown of the Observatory told me while I was in college, that some of these animals might be acceptable to the Museum, and relying on his words, I make this offer.

Very truly yours
